Eld. Gowen's Remarks

At the Funeral of Mrs. Lucinda Greenleaf in This City last Week.

Lucinda B. Stephens was born in Jessamine county, Kentucky, on the 25th day of November, 1814. Her age, therefore, at the time of her death, was 84 years and one day—she having celebrated, with a number of her aged and life-long friends, her 84th birthday just twenty-four hours before she fell asleep in Jesus. She was married to William Greenleaf in the year 1836, and shortly afterward removed to this town, where she has lived a constant source of blessing for thirty-three years. There were only two persons in town older than she, and there were not more than one or two who were here when she came. They had only gotten fairly started in life when her husband was taken from her, and she was left with five little children to battle with life single handed and alone. For forty-three long years she has bravely faced the future and grappled with present duty and died with a peaceful heart, and a heart as sunny as a June morning.

Not far from sixty-three years ago she gave herself to Christ, and always acknowledged his unreserved mastery over her life, and to this fact is to be traced the secret of her great usefulness and blessedness in this community.

Before the days of her extreme feebleness she was an angel of mercy in every home where sickness was to be found in all the town. One of our oldest citizens, who has known her since 1844, says that in this respect, he never saw her equal. During the scourges of cholera which swept over the town in 1852 and 1873, she bravely stood at her post, not afraid to serve her God and humanity in the very face of danger, and what seemed to many, almost certain death. During the civil war she ministered to the sick and dying with her untiring hospitality, and even with her poverty she gave to supply the wants of the hungry, foot-sore, and home-sick soldier. Her house was even turned into a hospital, where scores found relief and sympathy in her motherly ministrations.

Sister Greenleaf was a remarkable woman in many respects. This town has not witnessed for many a day the departure of a more really distinguished and remarkable citizen than she.

(1)—She was remarkable in that, she attained to so great an age. She had passed her fourscore years, and while they were to her "years of labor and sorrow" they had never dimmed the brightness of her mind, or the cheerfulness of her spirits. Only by comparison can we take in this long sweep of years. The events of the year 1814 read like ancient history now. The world has moved so rapidly that the space seems almost infinite, and yet this life just closed on earth spans this long period. Sister Greenleaf was born amid the strife and turmoil of our second English war, just a month and fourteen days before the battle of New Orleans. She lived therefore, under the administration of twenty-two of our twenty-five Presidents. She has lived during the lifetime of ALL of our Presidents but Washington, for Adams and Jefferson did not die until she was a girl of twelve years—in the year 1820. She lived to see the population of her beloved country grow from eight millions in 1814, to all of eighty millions in the year 1898. She knew nothing in her younger days of our modern conveniences. The steamship had just been invented. No steamship had ever plowed the stormy main. The old stage coach was the fast express of those days, and the Railroad train still slept in the inventors' brain. The old tallow dip and the wax-candle were the best illuminants the finest country palaces could afford. The electric light was an undreamed of possibility. The steel and flint were the parlor matches of that time, and the thousand and one conveniences that make our modern life a comparative luxury, were unknown to the hardy and struggling heroes and heroines of those primitive days.

(2)—She was remarkable in the possession of a strong and vigorous intellect. No observant persons could come in contact with her without the conviction being forced upon them that they were in the presence of a most remarkable mind, which, do pity its lack of early training commanded the respect of the highest culture. Her's was one of the best balanced minds, and she possessed, or was possessed of, the most unbounded common-sense.

(3)—She was remarkable for her striking personality—her independence of character. While not imperious, she was imperial; while not domineering, hers was a dominating character. She was born to rule. While possessed of the kindest of natures her will was her scepter. Her judgment was almost unerring, enabling her to form her decisions quickly, and when once formed, she was not easily moved from them. She was, therefore, a woman of deep and abiding convictions. There was never anything biting or spiteful in her words, but she always said what she pleased. Strange to say, we loved her the more, because of this. This striking feature of her life drew all hearts toward her. Very few old people, especially those who have been practical invalids for years and years, kept in perfect touch with old and young, like "Aunt Lucinda," as she was lovingly called. Her hold on the people was remarkable. The old loved her, and the young revered her. As the shadows of her eventful life lengthened, she did not become angry with the world, nor soiled at mankind, but like a golden sheaf of wheat mellowed and ripened by the sunlight of heaven, she was gathered in the richness and wealth of her years into the heavenly garner.

(4)—She was remarkable for her strong faith. Her hold on God was pre-eminent. Poverty, early struggles, separation from her beloved children, even death itself could not dampen the ardor of her love for Christ, or disturb the even flow of the river of peace that transformed her heart into a garden of bloom, and beauty, and fragrance, and fruitage. She has frequently told me that she never permitted herself to doubt the inspiring truth that "All things" do "work together for good to them that love God." In conversations with her how often have I been put to shame by the simplicity and child-likeness of her trust in God, and her complete rest on the promises of His word. In such faith she found complete freedom from worry, and to this fact, must be traced the long life that was vouchsafed to an otherwise frail and delicate body. She lived as God would have her live, and was given to see "length of days" and the "goodness of the Lord in the land of the living." Her declining years were spent under the kindly ministrations of loving children, with every care brushed away, and every want supplied. They realized during her life-time, what a rich treasure they had in her, so that, their after years need not be filled with vain regrets because they "knew not the day of their visitation," and failed to pour upon her the libation of their love.

THE ADJUTANT GENERAL.

Some of the Numerous Duties This Important Official Has to Perform.

The latest authority on military matters declares that the adjutant-general is the principal organ of the commander of an army in publishing orders. The same organ of the commander of a division, brigade, geographical division or department is styled assistant adjutant-general. The laws of the United States, however, provide for but one adjutant-general, with the rank of brigadier-general, made by regulations chief of a bureau of the war department, and charged, under the general, with details affecting army discipline, with the recruiting service, records, returns, etc.; two assistant adjutants-general, with the rank of colonel, and ten with the rank of major. The bureau duties of adjutant-general and assistants are: "Publishing orders in writing; making up written instructions and transmitting them; reception of reports and returns; disposing of them; forming tables showing the state and position of corps; regulating details of service; corresponding with the administrative departments relative to the wants of troops; corresponding with the corps, detachments or individual officers serving under the orders of the same commander, and the methodical arrangement and care of the records and papers of his office. The active duties of the adjutant-general consist in establishing camps, visiting guards and outposts, mustering and inspecting troops, inspecting guards and detachments, forming parades and lines of battle, the conduct and control of deserters and prisoners, making reconnaissances, and in general discharging such other duties as may be assigned to them."
